

TEF – a new opportunity for libraries?

Helen Anderson

Excellence in teaching

“The importance of ‘high quality teaching’ in Higher Education (HE) is becoming increasingly emphasised both in the United Kingdom (UK) and abroadExcellence in teaching has become entrenched in higher education policy and in the educational strategies of academic institutions, and increasingly linked to the performance and assessment of these institutions”

Higher Education Academy (HEA), 2016

Teaching Excellence Framework

The TEF is important UK legislation for Universities and will ultimately align excellence in teaching with University income (student fees)

TEF is therefore important to universities as it will impact their 'bottom line'

Teaching excellence will not be measured directly but instead by a number of 'outcomes' namely graduate employment, student retention, and student satisfaction

Strategy

“It is increasingly necessary for libraries to find new ways of being mission critical to their sponsoring institutions”

Rick Anderson, Associate Dean for Collections and Scholarly Communication at the University of Utah

Value Proposition

Technology

Value Proposition

Reading list systems have achieved a high adoption rate because they are seen as providing high value.

Indeed some university libraries pay more for their reading list system than their ILS.

By “investing our efforts into developing a genuinely effective, interactive and responsive reading list system” librarians at the University of Birmingham are aiming to “transform the teaching and learning experience for students and academics”.

Data

Value Proposition

The Economist

“The world’s most valuable resource is no longer oil, but data.

Smartphones and the internet have made data abundant, ubiquitous and far more valuable”

Jisc is spending more than £1 million over two years to provide academics with “everything you require to track student learning activity so that you can improve retention and attainment”.

Data makes a difference
